Excerpt from Unemployment Compensation Reform and the President's Reemployment Assistance Proposal: Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Human Resources and the Subcommittee on Trade of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, One Hundred Third Congress, Second Session; March 8, and July 12, 1994 In his message to the Congress of March 16, 1994, transmitting the proposed Reemployment Act, the President noted that his Administration's review of the current unemployment system leads to the conclusion that the unemployment system is inadequate because it assumes that most workers will get their old jobs back; workers lack quality job information, long-term training needs are not addressed, and services are difficult to access. The Administration has developed a proposal, the Reemployment Act of 1994, that places greater emphasis on reemployment assistance, including income support during long-term training. The main components of the Administration's reemployment proposal are: (1) early intervention with dislocated workers; (2) a comprehensive system of long-term training assistance for dislocated workers, regardless of the cause of dislocation; (3) income support to dislocated workers enrolled in long-term training programs;...
