We must take care that this power, which was created for our defence, was not used in any way to interfere with the affairs of other nations. (cheers.) The people of England had been taxed with the object of defending themselves. Finding they were surrounded by great military and naval powers, they had thought it necessary to bear all this taxation on purpose to make and feel themselves secure. Let us, then, look with extreme jealousy lest this power should be used in the quarrels on the continent. In looking over the events of history, it would be seen that, during the last 180 years, we had entered into no less than ten great wars - all for obtaining the balance of power. (laughter and cheers.) We commenced in the reign of William III. By fighting the Bourbon Louis XIV., and we finished in 1815 by fighting for the Bourbon to restore him to the throne of France. We fought against the Napoleon dynasty, and now we saw that dynasty reinstated in France. We had fought against Spain and for Spain to defend her and make her an independent country. We had fought for Holland and against Holland, and, to shorten along matter, we had fought both for and against nearly every nation in Europe. More than that, we had one period of our history made an expedition to attack Copenhagen, and we were now called upon by some parties to defend that capital. (cheers) He merely mentioned this to show that it was almost impossible, and beyond the power of human beings to settle this eternal balance of power, and the map of Europe. (cheers) Let the people of England have the good common...
