It lies high, as approached from the east; though it was very obvious that the way by which we had reached it was not the usual one. Towards the west one looks out over the high table land spreading out north from Mount Ebal; and on that side apparently is the ordinary road from Nablus. Towards the east Tulluzah overlooks the whole district drained by the Fari a and its branches, an extensive tract of arable and fertile land, but destitute of villages. The region called el-Kurawa at its mouth is cultivated by the Arabs Mas udy, a nomadic tribe; who sometimes also visit the higher parts of the valley for pasture.1 The main branch of the Fari a was seen coming down from the direction of Neby Bayazid in the northwest; it passes at some...
